Introduction

Social work and social care work is all about working with people.

Social workers form relationships with people. As advisor, advocate counsellor or listener a social worker helps people to live more successfully within their local communities by helping them to find solutions to their problems. Social work also involves engaging not only with clients themselves but their families and friends as well as working closely with other organisations including the NHS, schools, housing, the probation service and police.

Social workers tend to specialise in either adult or children and families services.

In adult services, roles include working with people with mental health problems, drug and alcohol problems, learning or physical difficulties in the community and in residential settings; working with offenders, by supervising them in the community and helping them to find work; assisting people with HIV/AIDS and working with older people at home, helping to sort out problems with their health, housing or benefits.

In services for children and families, roles include providing assistance and advice to keep families together; working in children's homes; managing fostering and adoption processes; providing support to younger people leaving care or who are at risk or in trouble with the law; or helping children who have problems at school or are facing difficulties brought on by illness in the family

People who work in social care (who are generally not Registered Social Workers) help people with the day to day aspects of their lives. People who have physical or learning difficulties, older people, people with mental health problems, families facing ill health, often require practical help coping with the everyday business of living. Social care work offers a worthwhile job that can turn into a rewarding career. Training and skills development for caring roles are very important and there are plenty of opportunities to undertake NVQs. Career pathways from care work to social work are now much better defined with social care workers able to train later as social workers.

Social workers have to be registered with the General Social Care Council and abide by the GSCC Code of Practice. Only Registered Social Workers are allowed to call themselves Social Workers.

A consultation process has just ended concerning the registration of the next group of sector workers, those working in domiciliary and residential social care.

Regulation of the social work and social care workforce through registration with the GSCC, which includes an individual commitment to the Code of Practice, and on going continuous professional development, has been widely welcomed by the sector as a way of raising the status, standing and trust in social work and protecting vulnerable people who use services.

Choosing a Training Provider

There are many training providers offering NVQs and other social care and social work programmes. So how do you go about deciding which one offers what your organisation needs?

Talk to them

It is well worth the investment of some time to explore with possible training providers what they offer. You will want to make sure that they understand the needs of social care and social work sector employers and how to work with adult learners in the workplace.

Key questions to ask:

- How is their programme delivered?
- Is it college or centre based, or is it workplace based?
- Do they offer group sessions on knowledge and understanding or skills development or do they use a distance learning package, either ICT or workbook based? Flexible ways of delivering a programme means that your organisation's needs can be met more easily.
- Are they prepared to negotiate to meet employer or learner needs?
- How will progress be monitored to spot problems or encourage achievement?
- Who is responsible for doing this?
- What are the timescales for the programme?

- How long do their learners normally take to achieve a full care qualification? Rates vary widely, but there is a judgement to be made here. Effective programmes reduce the time taken to complete an award, but it is equally important that learners have time to develop and demonstrate the required knowledge and skills.
- Who will be delivering the programme?
- Who are the tutors for any taught aspects and what is their experience or qualifications?
- Similarly who are the assessors and what is their experience? You want to be sure that tutors and assessors understand your type of setting and the kind of work your learners do.
- How is assessment done?
- What do the training providers provide and what is expected from the employer?
- How much will extra assessment add to the cost?
- Are you expected to provide in-house assessors?
- If so, what support or training will they be getting? In-house assessors need support and guidance if they are to do the job effectively.
- For NVQs, is assessment on-site?
- Do they use holistic methods (assessing several competences involved in one task) or do they proceed on a unit by unit basis?
- What use do they make of observation?
- Holistic models of assessment, making good use of observational evidence tend to be very effective in encouraging learner achievement, so it is important to check this out.
- Can portfolios be submitted electronically or is there a lot of paperwork? The amount of paperwork involved can be very off-putting to learners. You should be looking for systems that are not overly complicated. There is a lot of work underway at present about paperless portfolios (usually using effective computerised recording) – what have they learned from these pilot projects?
- How do they ensure quality?
- What kind of feedback or gradings do they get from External Verifiers or Inspectors? It is helpful to get an idea of how outside experts view the quality of the programme.
- How much will it cost and how is payment organised?

- Is it payable in stages or is it all upfront? Many providers require payment to be made upfront, placing the risk for learner non-completion with the employer. This may or may not be negotiable, with some training providers willing to accept stage payments.
- What is the training provider's track record of learner achievement for care awards?

At least two references

Ask to be put in touch with organisations similar to your own who have had staff on that particular programme. Contact these organisations and ask them how well they felt that the training provided met their needs. You might also like to ask what, if any, issues or problems arose and how well learners achieved. Most importantly, ask if they would use that training provider again.

A list of your requirements

Draw up a list of your requirements and send it to the training provider you think will best meet your needs, asking for a written statement of what they could offer, when they could offer it, what contribution you would be expected to make (for example by providing in-house assessors or releasing staff for centre-based learning), and what it would cost per learner.

Consider their response and negotiate

If the provider insists on something that you disagree with and think is very important, then look for a different provider. For example, if the training provider says that most of the assessment meetings must happen at college or training centre, and you believe they should happen in the workplace, then stick to what you believe.

Sign a contract

Once you are satisfied with what is being offered, sign a contract or written agreement with the training provider specifying all the relevant details of what has been agreed between you.

ENJOY IT!

The training that is undertaken will result in motivated and dedicated staff, confident in the quality care that they provide for the service users in their care.

Notes on the Directory.

The method of using this directory is similar to the way in which the information would be searched for on the internet.

- Step 1 Look at the Categories and decide which one you require.

- Step 2 Go to the page number shown in Category. eg Adult/Child Protection - page 5.

- Step 3 Look for the correct course. eg Protecting Vulnerable Adults.

- Step 4 Look through the list of potential training providers under Protecting Vulnerable Adults. They are sorted in Town order to assist with a geographical choice.

- Step 5 When you have chosen a provider eg Astor Care & Nursing Agency, Woking, go to the alphabetical list for full contact details.

Please Note:

Many of the providers listed have not been included in the Category Section as they provide distance learning or have not listed the courses they offer.
